Egg prices tumbled in May by the most since 1951 as US output continued to rebound from the worst-ever outbreak of avian influenza that killed millions of birds.

An almost 14% drop in prices from April came as meat and dairy prices also eased, helping to slow the rate of food inflation to 0.2% for the month from April, according to US Labor Department data released Tuesday. Overall, easing US inflation is supporting the case for the Federal Reserve to pause interest-rate hikes later this week.

US Eggs Decline by the Most Since 1951

Drop comes as output was rebounding from bird flu outbreak

Still, volatile weather continued to hit some food categories. Prices for frozen noncarbonated juices and drinks jumped 7.4% – the most ever – amid a disappointing ☐☐ US orange harvest.
